Pre-industrial Islamicate World (ca. 1350-1850 CE)

A peer-reviewed Series edited by Georg Leube (Bayreuth, Germany)

Published by Georg Olms Verlag | Nomos Publishing Group (Baden-Baden)

The aim of this new series is to promote the understanding of concepts, disciplines, texts, or phenomena across cultural spheres, regional localities, and linguistic boundaries, while relying on clear and grounded methodologies. The historical framework of the series spans the Islamic(ate) post-classical period up to the dawn of industrial modernity (roughly corresponding to 14th-19th centuries CE) and can be related to any geographical constellation across the culturally and religiously diverse Islamicate realm stretching from Indonesia to the shores of the Atlantic.

Themes that can be covered include, but are not limited to, transfer of knowledge across languages, time, and space in the Islamicate world; cross-denominational Islamic heritage and its material and non-material articulation; interreligious relationships in the Islamicate world; cultural, political, and economical interaction between Muslims and their neighbor societies in Europe, East and Central Asia, as well as Central and Eastern Africa; interdisciplinary endeavors of intellectual and social institutions or individual scholars and figures; aesthetic appreciations in various forms of literature and art.

The series languages are English and German.
